

JAPANESE IN SECRET PACT WITH RUSSIA

Treaty in Aggression in Pacific and Menaces China, Parley Told.

By WICKWIRE.
(Copyright, 1921.)
One of the busiest little hives of diplomatic industry during the arms limitation conference seems generally to have been overlooked by the news reporters.

Trail Is Very Interesting.
And, though its director seems to have won, unheralded, the only conclusive victory of the conference, a victory won early and now likely to hamper seriously any efforts of the "big three" to find a workable solution of the Far Eastern question.

Its activities might have continued unnoticed but for a routine news item stating that the almost forgotten Russian embassy had taken out licenses for the operation of eight automobiles in the District of Columbia.

What this orphaned embassy, which, according to the latest Congressional Directory, maintains a staff of only two, Ambassador Boris Bakhmeteff and Counselor Henry de Dach, could be doing with eight motor cars seemed worthy of investigation.

And so it proved, for the trail of these automobiles leads not only to the Russian embassy on Sixteenth street, but to active groups with kindred though variant interests domiciled at the Richmond and Washington Hotels, and promises yet to lead to an equally active group just arrived in the city from Eastern Siberia, and, possibly, to another here representing the Far Eastern republic.

Inquiry among the groups already in the city developed quickly the fact that all were jubilant over the promise made by Secretary Hughes early last month in connection with the request of the Far Eastern republic for representation at the conference, that the principal conference for the Russian interests "in all trust for the Russian people." All were inclined to concede the credit for obtaining this promise, in the form promulgated, to Ambassador Bakhmeteff. Even the agreement that so long this promise is fulfilled there can be no satisfactory settlement of the Far Eastern problems.

Russia Won't Give Up.
"How is it possible," asked the spokesman for one of the factions, "for England, France, even under so powerful a pressure as that of the United States, to relinquish their rights acquired by treaty in their various spheres of influence and to permit the dissolution of their consular courts, or abate in any way their other claims so long as precisely similar rights acquired by Russia in northern China remain unchanged?"

"It is inconceivable that any Russian government that may succeed the Soviets would ever abandon Russia's claim to the Chinese Eastern railway without the repayment of the billion rubles invested therein. The ownership of this railway necessitates control of the city of Harbin in Manchuria. So long as such rights claimed by Russia are maintained, the Japanese are likely to keep strings tied on Kiaochow, the British on Weihaiwei, and the French on Kwanchow Wan.

"It is possible, of course, that England, France, and the United States, if they should so agree, might abrogate summarily the Russian rights and maintain their decision by force. But this would be in direct contravention of the league of nations; moreover, it would require the maintenance of a four-power alliance, something practically unattainable, it would seem, in the present state of public opinion in the nations concerned.

Russians Want Peace.
"The Russian people are as eager—they are more pacific than some—for the establishment of world peace and the elimination of the economic causes for war in the Far East. But we rejoice at the promise of Mr. Hughes has assured for Russia a hearing in the final settlement of the problems arising in that quarter, if not at the present conference, then at a later one.

Though neither the Russian embassy nor the delegations co-operating therewith have direct representation before the Conference, they are availing themselves of the opportunity to get their views before the conferees.

Thus, anticipating Monday the arrival of the delegation representing the Far Eastern Republic, Boris Brasol, head of the delegation representing the Russian Monarchical party, sent an identical memorandum to all the delegates purporting to show how this government is controlled from Moscow and how by it the center of propaganda for the sovietizing of Asia. Another document filed Monday gives detailed figures to show the army reserves now at Trotsky's command, and totaling 4,750,000 men, with 19,450,000 effective rifles at his disposal.

Secret Treaty Disclosed.
Two weeks ago, in presenting to the American State Department a summary of the aims of the Russian Monarchical party, Brasol disclosed existence of a secret treaty entered into in 1914 between the Czar's government and Japan, binding these powers to unity of action in conserving the expansion of other powers in Eastern Asia, which, he said, should be recognized, "that all should have an attitude toward other powers on the Pacific and toward the principle of the open door in China."

General Besoravov, former commander of the Russian Imperial Guard, and Archbishop Alexander, head of the Russian Church in America, arrived in Washington yesterday to serve as Mr. Brasol's associates on the Monarchical party delegation.

The Social Democratic or Cadet group is represented here by two men whose names, a few years ago, were on every tongue, Prince George Lvoff, who headed the first Russian government following the fall of the Czar, and Prof. Paul Milukoff, his minister of foreign affairs; and a third, Nicholas Avksentiev, less well-known now, perhaps, but likely to be heard of in the future.

Even the delegation from the Far Eastern republic, which reached here the same day, is at one with the "white" groups in demanding the withdrawal of Japanese forces from Vladivostok and Eastern Siberia. For the time they will have little in common, the other factions holding them to be but camouflaged communists, tools of Moscow and the Third International.

This allegation is, of course, controverted by the members of the delegation who are Alexander A. Yankoff, B. B. Kivirsky, P. K. Karavayev and Gustav J. Farman. Of all the groups, this alone represents a government which is actually functioning on Russian territory, accepting at its face the claim of the maritime mission that it is purely a commercial one.

Three Groups Seen in Harmony.
Ambassador Bakhmeteff, of course, is the representative of the Kerensky group, which overthrew Lvoff's government, but the three groups above seem to have composed their differences so far as the foreign relationships of their country are concerned. A delegation headed by P. P. Goudikoff, which arrived here Monday night and claims to be on a purely commercial mission from the Siberian maritime provinces is likely, so far as it indulges in politics, to line up with these missions.

Even the delegation from the Far Eastern republic, which reached here the same day, is at one with the "white" groups in demanding the withdrawal of Japanese forces from Vladivostok and Eastern Siberia. For the time they will have little in common, the other factions holding them to be but camouflaged communists, tools of Moscow and the Third International.
